I have a copy of the Harrison L5 and L5A "Operator's Handbook" that I have converted to an Adobe Acrobat .pdf format (56 pages). It is a rather large file (737 Mb) since I left all the pages in raster format from the scanner at 300 dpi. The original copy of the manual is in 'new' condition so the scanned copy is very good.

Harrison shimmed and scraped the bed to the stand at the factory on the I5's, thats why everyone is recommending people don't split them to move. The stand on that model was a built up from thick steel sections welded together affair not a usual cast iron foot design so I dont think as prone to creep over time like a cast iron base would be?
